Carbon Monoxide Dangers Are Back

Dangers of carbon monoxide poisoning from auto exhausts, home space heaters, or defective chimney connections are back again with winter.

Hundreds of people needlessly lose their lives from this colorless, odorless gas. One part of carbon monoxide in 1,000 parts of air will kill a person exposed to it for two hours; a concentration of three parts in 1,000 is rapidly fatal.

An idling auto engine exhausts approximately 35 cubic feet of carbon monoxide an hour, and more if running faster. There is no safe limit of time during which an auto may be operated in a small garage with the doors closed. A dangerous condition may be created in less than one minute, and enough absorbed in five minutes to cause death.

There are cases on record where occupants of a parked car died when the motor of a car in front of them was running and carbon monoxide was drawn through the front end fresh air intake of their own car. This could happen also from following another car too closely. It could happen, too, to a youngster on a sled close behind a car.

Giant Squid Disappears; Few Seen In 50 Years

The giant squid, largest of all invertebrates and subject of many sea legends, appears to have dropped out of sight for the past 50 years. The great 10-tentacled mollusk, which sometimes reached an overall length of 55 feet, had its major habitat in the North Atlantic, off Newfoundland and Labrador. This fantastic creature of the oceans probably gave rise to many sea-serpent reports. Its 30-foot-long, torpedo-shaped body with the tentacles extended in front would appear decidedly snakelike in the water. At no time were many of the monsters seen. They were quite obviously creatures of great depths. Between approximately 1875 and 1890, several were washed ashore in Newfoundland and Labrador. This fantastic creature of the oceans probably gave rise to many sea-serpent reports. They were quite obviously creatures of great depths. Between approximately 1875 and 1890, several were washed ashore in Newfoundland and Nova Scotia, but these probably were sick animals. Since the turn of the century there have been very few reports of sighting a giant squid, either on land or in the water. The Smithsonian Institution has on exhibition a life-sized model of such a monster, made up from several specimens. It would be unlikely that an entire animal ever would be found in tact. The fact that no reports of the creature now are being received possibly indicates that the creatures are nearing extinction

NEWS FOR VETERANS

Certain German and Japanese citizens or subjects who previously were not eligible to receive Veterans Administration compensation or pension because they were residing in Germany or Japan may now be placed on the rolls under a new law, VA announced.

VA said the law does not outhorize any new class of beneficiaries or benefits. It merely restores the rights of certain citizens or subjects of Germany or Japan to receive VA compensation or pension based on service in the American armed forces.

Claimants will have to file new applications and they must show they are not guilty or assisting the enemy or of sabotage.

No retroactive payments prior to July 1, 1954 will be allowed; however, if applications are filed before July 1, 1955, payments in some cases may be made back to July 1, 1954 when the new law was enacted.

NEWS FOR VETERANS

The highest single month's total of GI home loan appraisal requests in nearly four years was received by the Veterans Administration during June.

In the first six months of 1954 the South Atlantic States (Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Maryland, Delaware and the District of Columbia) showed an increase in appraisal requests for only proposed dwellings of 61.9 per cent as compared with the first half of 1953.

Nationally, the increase was 84 per cent.

VA said it received 92,919 appraisal requests for proposed dwelling units and existing homes in June, the fifth straight month an increase was reported. It was the highest month since October, 1950 when appraisal requests for 119,734 proposed and existing homes were received just before credit curbs were invoked.

VA also announced that, for the third straight month, GI home loan applications submitted by lenders on behalf of veterans showed a sharp increase. A total of 46,239 applications were submitted, an increase of 4,423 over May.

Of the 92,919 appraisal requests received in June, 52,749 were for proposed units, an increase of 504 units over May, and 40,170 were for existing homes, an increase of 3,281 over the previous month.

Builders, lenders and veterans must request VA to determine the reasonable value of proposed and existing homes before selling or submitting loan applications to VA. Loan applications for homes for which VA has determined reasonable values are usually submitted to VA about three to eight weeks after the appraisal request.

During the first six months, applications, an increase of over the 153,589 received in the like period

IN MEMORY

GOWIN: In loving memory of our dear daddy and grand-daddy, Peter A. Gowin, who left us 7 years ago today, July 27, 1948.

July should be a month
So bright and gay.
But it is so hard for me
To feel that way.
For it was 7 years ago today,
God called my darling daddy away.
All I have left now is memories
Of a daddy I loved so well;
And to think he will never come back, hurts me more than I can tell.
Although your soul is now at rest and free from pain,
This world would seem like heaven If we had you back with us again.

—Sadly missed by daughter, Mrs. Wesley Stanley and Children.

POISON IVY CAN BE CONTROLLED

If you or your children can't stay out of poison ivy—kill it!

That's the timely advice concerning this troublesome plant from John Amos, associate plant pathologist at VPI.

He points out that now that weed chemicals are effective in killing poison ivy, there is no point in letting it stay around.

Two chemicals are highly effective. They are ammate, or a mixture of 2,4-D and 2,4,5-T. If the poison ivy grows near the garden where there is possobility of injury to sesitive plants such as tomatoes, grapes, and other vine crops, Amos suggests using ammonium sulfamate which is sold on the market as ammate. It is a yellow salt and can be dissolved easily in water.

Use at the rate of about 12 ounces to a gallon of water, and thoroughly wet the foliage of the plants to be killed. Be careful not to get the spray on grass or plants you do not wanted killed. Usually the foliage will wilt in 24 hours, but the action is slow and will take a week or more for the plants to die. After 4 to 6 weeks there may be some slight resprouting of the vines, and occasionally 2 or maybe 3 treatments will be needed for a complete kill.

Amixture of 2, 4-D and 2,4,5-T will give better control than 2,4-D alone when there are brambles present. Use the low volatile form to reduce chances of injury to sensitive plants nearby. It will kill bluegrass, and there are many other plants which can be injured when the spray gets on them.

THIS IS NATIONAL FARM SAFETY WEEK

By R. H. Trice

In 1953, 510 accidents were fatal to Virginia farm families. (Transportation deaths not included.)

Deaths due to accidental falls totaled 126 and deaths due to fire and explosion totaled 105. (Figures based on studies made by the Virginia Rural Safety Council.)

Virginia farmers can reduce the accident hazard due to falls by installing Good Lighting in work areas, stairways and dark passageways. Use of three-way switches or remote control systems to control lighting from two or more points will be a safety feature on your farm as well as a "step-saver."

Adequate wiring, and proper fuse protection will eliminate some fire hazards on the farm. Fires start small. Control them by a properly planned electric water system.

Agricultural Representatives from your power supplier are a free service. Ask for their service in planning good lighting, safe wiring and safe electrical applications. In doing so you are taking a step toward making every week a Farm Safety Week.
